WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION ACT

The Whistleblower Protection Act was established in 1989 to protect federal employees who engage in “whistleblowing” that is making a disclosure evidencing illegal or improper government activities. The protections of the WPA apply to most federal executive branch employees and become applicable when a personnel action is taken because of a “protected disclosure” made by a “covered employee.” Generally, whistleblower protections may be raised within four forums or proceedings.

(1) employee appeals to the Merit Systems Protection Board of an agency’s adverse action against an employee, known as “Chapter 77” appeals; (2) actions instituted by the Office of Special Counsel: (3) individually maintained rights of action before the Merit Systems protection Board (known as an individual right or action, or IRA); and (4) grievances brought by the employee under negotiated grievance procedures. In order to trigger the protections of the WPA, a case must personnel action that was taken because of a protected disclosure made by a covered employee. Generally, current employees, former employees or applicants for employment to positions in the Executive branch of government in both the competitive and the executive service, as “well as positions in the Senior Executive Service, are considered covered employees. Positions exempted by the President for national security reasons arc not protected by the whistleblower statute.
